

Keren Lowell, "Subcutaneous" November 5 - December 1
Opening reception Nov 5th, 5 to 7 pm, Artist talk at 6pm.

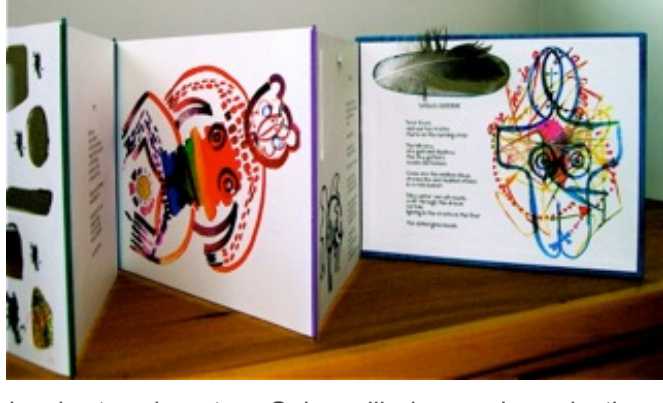

Subcutaneous: being, living, used or made under the skin.

"I use the idea of 'skin' as a metaphor to talk about boundaries between inside and outside, or the zones where they meet. We inhabit our own skin - the thin membrane that protects our physical self from the rest of the world. A wall is another kind of boundary, and so is the surface of the earth.

When I walk in the woods with my dogs somewhere between the city and the wilderness, I notice things that emerge from the ground where many feet have worn a path - tree roots, rocks, grass pushing through hard-packed earth. I see places where water and earth meet, and water leaves evidence of its presence - potholes, ripples in the sand.

In this installation, I'm investigating the mutable boundaries of surfaces - those of the earth and the body, its skin and cellular structures, even the gallery walls. I feel separate and sometimes isolated from others, the planet, even my own biology, yet these skins reveal how porous these boundaries really are." -- Keren Lowell

Jo Going, Poems from "Wild Cranes" and other selections. November 8th, 5:30 PM

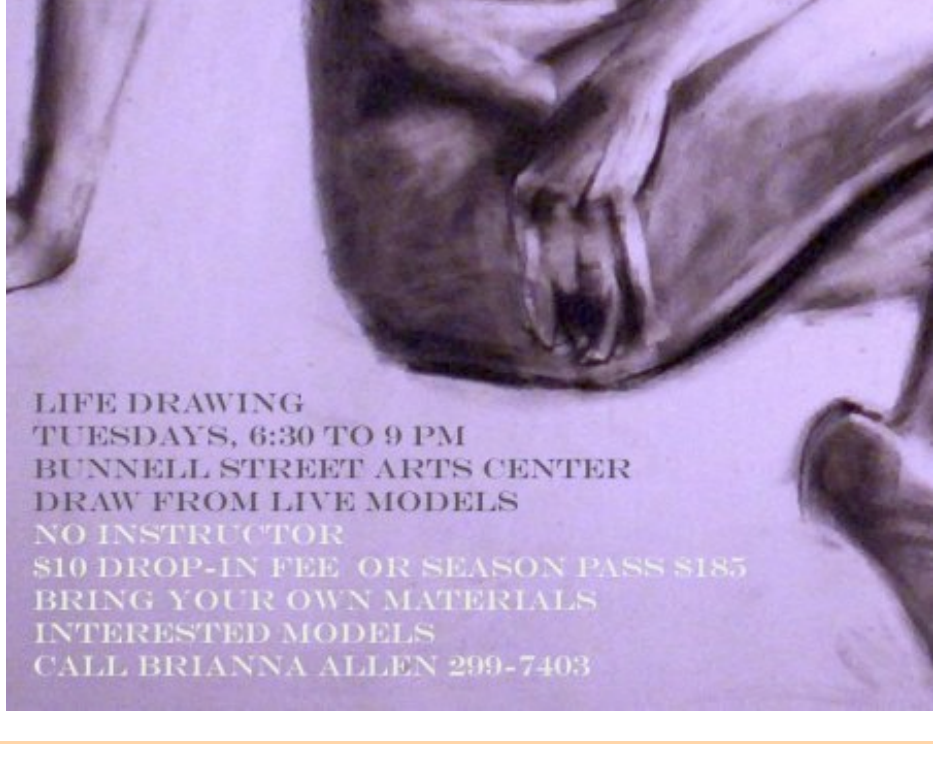

Jo Going is a long-time Alaskan multi-media artist whose book Wild Cranes was recently added to New York's Museum of Modern Art's permanent collection. Wild Cranes won the 1997 National Museum of Women in the Arts Library Fellows competition and includes both visual art and poetry. Going will also read a selection of her poems published in "Wild Moments" and "Crosscurrents North, Alaskans on the Environment" (University of Alaska Press), the Alaska Quarterly Review and "Ice Floe: Poetry of the Circumpolar North."

Bunnell welcomes New Life Drawing Coordinator, Brianna Allen and thanks Gaye Wolfe for her years of dedication and leadership.

"Diana" by Brianna Allen

Brianna Allen received her BFA in Painting and a BA in Entrepreneurial Studies from the University of Southern Maine in 2008. She spent two summers in Alaska and presented two shows of her Alaskan portraits in Maine before deciding to move here permanently this year. She stepped forward as an enthusiastic volunteer as the Life Drawing Group's Coordinator just as Bunnell's Vice President, Gaye Wolfe, decided to step down after 14 years to spend more time developing a new body of figurative paintings. Special thanks to Gaye for her extraordinary long-term commitment to Life Drawing Group and her gracious leadership!

Jazzline, a smashing success! supporting Artist in Schools and the energies and talents of Homer dancers.

Likely as not, you were there at the Mariner Theater for a spectacular show of dance and movement and know what a wonderful time was had by all, performers and audience alike. It is a marvelous show that can entertain an audience of toddlers, teenagers, adults, women, men, girls and boys... and Jazzline, choreographed by artistic director Jocelyn Shiro-Westphal did just that. Wow what a night! The event raised funds to match Alaska State Council on the Arts grants to support the Artist in Schools program and will continue inspiring the community throughout the school year.

Thank you Jocelyn, for your tremendous generosity, energy and commitment to youth art education. And Thank you dancers and stage crew for your incredible performance, Pat and Janet McNary for stage managing, parents and volunteers who ushered and helped backstage. Thank you Wendell and Latitudes 59 and Ann-Margret Wimmerstedt for your wonderful gift of cast and crew, the Homer Bookstore for selling tickets, Homer Council on the Arts for use of the Marley Floor, and Lynne and Kathleen of the Mariner Theater for helping us pull off a great evening. It was a wonderful, wonderful night enjoyed by all!

Sandy Gillespie is Alex Combs Award Winner

"Newly Born Woman," detail, Sandy Gillespie

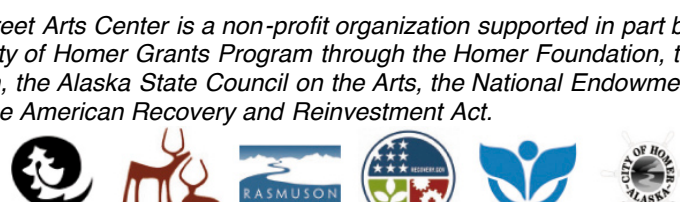

Congratulations to Sandy Gillespie, recipient of a $500 award to further her studies of paper clay, "a medium which will lend itself to my mixed media work, giving me another form in which to translate the language of my art". The Alex Combs Artist Award is a designated fund administered by the Bunnell Street Art Center for artists working in ceramics, painting and sculpture. The fund has been built from cash donations and from the sale of works by the late Alex Combs, a renowned artist and multi-media mentor.
